

ABSTRACT

Aspects for integrating messaging functionality into database operations are described. The aspects include providing one or more chosen functions from a messaging system in a database system. The one or more chosen functions from the database system are then utilized within structured query language statements to access the messaging system from the database system.

5

STL9-2000-0066US1\1804P